Tools for Understanding a Bill

George Washington Williams Room Exhibit, Statehouse

How to Read a Bill

Members of the General Assembly rely on the nonpartisan staff of the Legislative Service Commission (LSC) to draft the bills they request. While the drafting work is performed by LSC, members should become familiar with the form and structure of bills in order to have a thorough understanding of the law-making process. Members can learn about the contents of a bill in a variety of ways such as reading bill analyses and fiscal notes or listening to committee testimony and the comments of sponsors, other legislators, and lobbyists. However, there is no substitute for reading the bill itself.

When reading a bill, a member may have questions relating to the meaning and clarity of the language. These are often the same questions that cause difficulties in administering the law when the bill is enacted. Occasionally, technical or legal terms are required, but normally the language of a bill should be simple and concise. If the language is not clear, the member should seek clarification.

Elements of a Bill

The Ohio Constitution requires legislation to be drafted in a specific format. The sample bill (Elements of a Bill) illustrates the major parts of a bill.

At the beginning of each bill is a paragraph called the title. The title, which is required by the Ohio Constitution, lists the sections of the Revised Code being amended, enacted, or repealed. It also states in concise, general terms the subject of the bill. If the bill is an emergency measure, imposes a tax, or makes an appropriation, the title must include that information.

The next element in the bill is the style clause, also required by the Ohio Constitution. Each bill must include the clause: “Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio.” This phrase has no bearing on the substance of the bill, but all bills, even those that only repeal or amend rather than enact sections of the Revised Code, begin with this style clause.

After the required elements, bills are organized by sections. The amending or enacting clause and the body of the bill, except as described below, appear in Section 1. The clause lists the Revised Code sections that the bill proposes to amend or enact. The body of the bill immediately follows the list of Revised Code section numbers. The text of each Revised Code section being amended or enacted is printed in its entirety in numerical order. If the sole function of a bill is to repeal sections of the Revised Code, then Section 1 simply lists the sections being repealed. The text of sections being repealed outright – that is, eliminated from the Revised Code – is not contained in the body of the bill.

All proposed new language in the body of a bill is underlined. Note the word “sixty” in the body of the sample bill. If an entirely new section is being enacted, all the language of the new section is underlined. If existing law is being amended, the new language is underlined while the unchanged current law appears without underlining.

If the function of a bill is to remove language from existing law, the words to be removed are stricken through by a horizontal line. Note the stricken word ~~“fifty”~~ in the body of the sample bill. This means that if the bill is enacted, the words stricken through will be deleted from current law. If numerical references or grammatical symbols, such as commas and periods, are being removed, they also will be stricken through in the bill.

When a Revised Code section is amended, a revised version of the section is created to take its place. The Ohio Constitution requires the repeal of the former section since it no longer exists. This is true even if much of the language of the section is unchanged. Therefore, it is necessary to state somewhere in the bill that the former section is repealed. This is normally done in Section 2 of the bill. This section contains a list of the section numbers of all existing sections of the Revised Code being repealed as a result of amendments. In the sample bill (Elements of a Bill), R.C. 5748.06 is being amended, with Section 2 stating “That existing section 5748.06 of the Revised Code is hereby repealed.”

Outright repeals (when a section of the Revised Code is repealed without being amended or reenacted) appear in a separate section of the bill. In that separate section, Revised Code sections being repealed outright do not include the word “existing” before the word “sections.” Note in Section 3 of the sample bill, “section 5748.07” is being repealed outright. In a bill that does nothing but repeal one or more sections of law outright, Section 1 lists the Revised Code section numbers of the outright repeals and is the bill’s only section. Sections containing repeals, both as a result of amendments and outright repeals, are referred to as “repeal clauses.”

Emergency Laws and Delayed Effective Dates

Under Article II, section 1c of Ohio’s Constitution, after an enacted bill becomes law and is filed with the Secretary of State, there is a 90-day time period before the law goes into effect. During that period, citizens may exercise their right of referendum, which allows voters to approve or reject the law. (See Chapter 2.)

However, emergency legislation is not subject to the referendum and goes into immediate effect. The reason for the emergency must be set forth in a separate section of the bill. That section must be voted on separately and receive the affirmative vote of $\frac{2}{3}$ of the members elected to each house of the General Assembly. This section, called an emergency clause, is usually the last section of a bill. The following is an example of an emergency clause:

Section 3. This act is hereby declared to be an emergency measure necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, and safety. The reason for this necessity is that its enactment into law at the earliest possible time will prevent a lapse in the payment of benefits to Ohio's neediest citizens. Therefore, this act shall go into immediate effect.

A bill also may stipulate that certain of its sections will become effective on a specific date later than the 91st day after it is filed with the Secretary of State. There is no explicit authority for delayed effective dates in the Ohio Constitution. However, since the normal 90-day effective date allows voters to exercise their right of referendum, lengthening the period before which sections of a bill become effective does not interfere with this right of referendum and is presumably permitted by the Constitution.

Uncodified Law

Emergency clauses and effective date clauses are not the only matters placed in separate sections at the end of a bill. Laws of a special or temporary nature that are not assigned permanent Revised Code section numbers and are therefore called uncodified laws also appear at the end of a bill. The following is an example of an uncodified law:

Section 3. Not later than sixty days after the effective date of this act, the Auditor of State shall provide to the Director of Natural Resources a comprehensive audit of all funds, assets, and liabilities of the Department of Administrative Services that are related to the canal lands program. Upon receipt of the audit, the Director shall submit a copy of it to the Director of Budget and Management, who shall request Controlling Board approval to transfer all such funds, assets, and liabilities to the Department of Natural Resources that have not otherwise been transferred to that Department by this act.

From Bill to Act to Law

- A bill becomes an act upon completion of action by both houses and signature of the presiding officers. It is then reprinted with the addition of the signature page and the words "An Act" replacing the words "A Bill."
- An act becomes law:
 - Upon signature of the Governor;
 - If the Governor fails to sign the act or return it with a veto within ten days, excluding Sundays; or
 - When a Governor's veto is overridden by a $\frac{3}{5}$ majority vote of the members of each house.
- Unless a law provides for a tax levy, is an appropriation for current expenses, or contains an emergency clause, it becomes effective on the 91st day after being filed with the Secretary of State.

As with any other statute, an uncodified law is part of the law of Ohio and is filed in the office of the Secretary of State. However, because it is not a law of a general and permanent nature, it does not appear in the statutes in codified form. It should be noted that when uncodified law is enacted, it does not appear in underlined form. Yet, when uncodified language that has already been enacted is amended, changes in the text appear stricken through or underlined just as in codified law.

Unlike some other states, Ohio generally does not include legislative findings or statements of intent in legislation. In the rare case that these statements are included in bills, they are included in the Revised Code rather than uncodified law.

Technical Rules to Remember When Reading a Bill

1. New language being added to an existing section of law is underlined. Language in existing law that remains unchanged appears without underlining.
2. Proposed new codified law is underlined. Proposed new uncodified law appears at the end of a bill and is not underlined.
3. With few exceptions, letters are not capitalized in codified law unless they are the first letter in a sentence or the first letter of certain proper nouns (e.g., “Revised Code” and “Ohio”).
4. Language, numbers, and punctuation to be deleted from existing law appear in a bill with a horizontal line through the text.
5. An existing section of law being amended requires repeal of the section as it existed prior to amendment and reenactment of the section with the amending language. Sections being repealed outright and not amended or reenacted are not printed in the bill; rather, a statement that the section is being repealed appears in the title and the repeal clause.
6. Numerical references to money or population are spelled out in codified sections. However, dates (e.g., July 1, 2025) and tables of numbers, such as the classification tables and pay ranges of state employees, are in numerical form.

The Ohio Revised Code

The vast majority of the bills considered by the General Assembly seek to amend, enact, or repeal some part of the Ohio Revised Code. Understanding the organization of the Revised Code can therefore improve understanding of a bill. As described earlier, statutes are enacted in two forms, codified and uncodified. Laws that are of a general and permanent nature are codified – that is, organized within the structure of the Revised Code.

The Revised Code in use today began as House Bill 1 of the 100th General Assembly. Its enactment in 1953 marked the culmination of a major revision effort aimed at reorganizing and restoring order to an earlier codification of Ohio statutes known as the General Code. The General Code had been in effect since 1910, when it was enacted to replace an even earlier codification known as the Revised Statutes. Now in use longer than either of these earlier codifications, the Revised Code owes its longevity to its sound organization and to the program of continuing code revision maintained by LSC staff.

Revised Code Organization

The Revised Code is organized into titles, chapters, and sections. General provisions, which include sections that pertain to the entire Code, are contained in a separate volume that is not given a title number.

Revised Code Numbering

Sec. 5748.081

1. Title number. The 3rd or the 3rd and 4th digits to the left of the decimal point. If there is only one digit to the left of the decimal point, the reference is to the General Provisions (e.g., 1.01).
2. Chapter number. The 1st and 2nd digits to the left of the decimal point in a particular title.
3. Section number. The 1st and 2nd digits to the right of the decimal point in a particular chapter within a title.
4. Supplemental section number. The 3rd or more additional digits to the right of the decimal point.

Titles, the most general classification, are divided into chapters, each of which deals with a particular topic of the law within the general subject of the title. The chapters are further divided into sections. The sections contain the text of individual statutes pertaining to the chapter subject matter.

Initially, to allow for growth, only odd-numbered titles and chapters were used. However, the Revised Code now includes one even-numbered title and some even-numbered chapters.

Chapters are usually organized in a standard manner. If special terms are used within a chapter, definitions will appear in the first section, followed by the main subject of the chapter, administrative provisions, exceptions, and, if needed, penalties. As a general rule, a section prescribing a penalty is designated section “.99” in a given chapter. However, there are numerous exceptions, especially in Title 29 (the Criminal Code), Chapter 3599 (offenses and penalties under the Election Law), and Title 45 (the Motor Vehicle, Aeronautics, and Watercraft Laws).

Sections are numbered consecutively within a chapter. Occasionally, it is necessary to add supplemental sections to the Revised Code between consecutively numbered sections. These sections are indicated by one or more additional digits to the right of the decimal point.

Most statutes that have application throughout the Revised Code, and some miscellaneous laws, have been assigned to the General Provisions. These include rules guiding the interpretation and construction of statutes (found in Chapter 1 of the General Provisions) and statutes designating Ohio’s official state symbols such as the state flag, bird, song, beverage, and invertebrate fossil (Chapter 5 of the General Provisions).

Official Revised Code Online

Ohio's official online publication of state laws and regulations is available to the public online, free of charge, on the Ohio Laws and Administrative Rules website: codes.ohio.gov. The site is also available at the Laws link on the General Assembly website: legislature.ohio.gov. The site is maintained by LSC, which by law has become the official publisher of the online Revised Code and Ohio Administrative Code. The site is updated on an ongoing basis. It includes an unannotated version of the Revised Code and allows for downloading authenticated copies of individual Revised Code sections.

Research Aids and Annotations

In addition to reproducing the text of Ohio's codified statutory law, commercial publishers of the Revised Code provide various research aids, including indexes, annotations to judicial decisions and opinions of the Ohio Attorney General, the legislative history of each section, cross-references to other statutes, court rules, citations to law review articles, and the complete texts of the United States and Ohio Constitutions. As with the sections of the Revised Code, these research aids are regularly updated. Uncodified sections of law also may be included, usually as annotations to the Revised Code sections to which they relate. The names or headings that commercial publishers give to Revised Code titles, chapters, and sections are unofficial and not part of the law.

Several sets of the commercially published reproductions of the Revised Code are available for members of the General Assembly to use. In the House, sets are available in the Clerk's office. In the Senate, sets are available in the Clerk's office, the Senate chamber, two hearing rooms, and the majority and minority caucus rooms. The LSC library also has sets of the Revised Code available for members to use.
